I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to murder grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear. I respectfully demand that you stop all trophy hunting of any species immediately.

Please do not allow trophy hunting of the Grizzly Bears. These majestic animals should be allowed to continue growing their populations, having previously been brought to the edge of extinction. These great bears are a national treasure and should be safeguarded from the devastation of the disgusting trophy hunters who kill innocent animals for a cheap thrill and bragging rights. These animals deserve to live their lives undisturbed in the wilderness so they can flourish and remain an important part of our country's natural wildlife for generations to come.

Please enter your comments for the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

The grizzly bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Grizzly Beas are a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear..

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

In addition to being an iconic species in their own right, Grizzlies form an important part of the ecosystem. They balance the population of prey species in a specific habitat. Like other Apex predators, these bears select weaker (ill, injured) animals as their prey. If grizzly hunting is allowed to resume, no doubt the bigger, healthier "prize" bears will be chosen, but this will weaken the genetic pool of these predators as well. Ultimately, as the stronger, more effective hunters are selected out of the predator/prey balance, the population of prey animals will grow exponentially and land management will ultimately have to look for a way to manage those populations, too. Ultimately, human attempts to balance these populations will be far less effectively than the bears would do the same job. Please do not allow these hunts to go forward!

Grizzlies are top of the food chain. It has been proven that the entire ecosystem is balanced when predators are present in adequate numbers. We can coexist with them!

I would like to respectfully submit that any proposal for allowing hunting of grizzlies, even if contingent upon de-listing from the ESA, is premature and imprudent. Grizzly numbers are still too low, their habitat range too constricted, their reproductive rate too shaky; in short, the odds of the species' survival are far too grim for any such proposal to truly be wise. It cannot be in the best interests of western biodiversity to needlessly allow such a threat to proceed, and I fervently hope that cooler heads prevail so that this proposal can be put to rest.

As a guide in Yellowstone for the past 25 years, I have had decades of experience both living with, hiking with and teaching about grizzlies. I am acutely aware of their behavior, biology, population status, and political status. I strongly encourage you to prevent trophy hunting until we can better manage the annual deaths (close to 50 in MT for several years running.) If you cannot sustain the political pressure to hold off on a trophy hunt, I strongly suggest you keep it to only one or two, since you know the total will be 10x that high. That already feels like too many, but I also know people are chomping at the bit to take out a grizzly. I get it will likely happen. But I feel like their umbrella species-status, how much they affect other species of both plants and animals, and how amazing it is to live with them should allow you to take a moment and slow down with pursuing a hunt. Thank you.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

As apex predators, grizzly bears are crucial to the health of the ecosystems in which they live. Humans nearly brought grizzlies to extinction decades ago, and they have been slow to recover. Even now, they do not inhabit nearly the range they once did. These bears already face enough threats to their survival. Trophy hunting should not be permitted when grizzlies are delisted as an endangered species. They should be allow to thrive in the wilderness without the risk of someone killing them merely for the thrill of it. There is no scientific reason to allow the killing of grizzlies.

As a native Montanan and lifelong conservationist I strongly oppose grizzly hunting. The recovery is much too fragile and they have so many obstacles for habitat and mating- every grizzly is necessary. Also when tourists can return have safe and protected areas for people to view bears and make money off life instead of death. Thank you

Please enter your comments for the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am formally informing you that I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

It is such a shame! Mankind really does everything for money. Instead of feeling responsible to protect nature and all creatures you will allow the killing of living beings for idiots who only feel strong when they have a gun in their hand, shooting animals which have no chance to defend themselves. What kind of world is it we are living in? Why do we destroy precious environment and all those who are living in it? Are we too stupid to recognize that everything we do will come back to us. We harm ourselves by our behavior but we are not willing to change it because of lovely money. What a shame! Please listen to your heart - in case you have one - and do not even think about allowing the killing of the grizzly bears, because they belong to nature and they help to shape the eco system in which they live. Therefore and for humanity reasons: NO TROPHY HUNTING!

I'm against all forms of trophy hunting for obvious reasons. As are most hunters and non-hunters alike. Especially in wilderness areas, which I have backpacked for years. Nearly all the trash I find and hike out comes from hunters. Some from recreational users, mostly fast packers and bikers. Allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears will increase the amounts of trash and human caused environmental damage. Additionally, opening up wilderness to trophy hunting after an increase in grizzly bear deaths over the past couple years risks damage to ecosystems and is not worth the risk.

Once there are 10x more bears than now, maybe allow a very limited "hunt" for real men where they use just a knife... no firearms, bows, or tech BS.

We'll see how many are just armchair trophy snobs.

Q3

Please enter your comments for the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

No Trophy Hunting!

The grizzly bear is a quintessential symbol of wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range.

Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management.

In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I raise my voice for grizzly bears and tell the State of Montana's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council that I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Nonhuman animals are sentient beings.

Hello,

I would like to say that hunting Grizzlies is ill advised on many levels. If there is no need then it is a waste of an animal. It promotes the wrong type of hunting and wild open spaces as it teaches those that wildlife and the land they live in are expendable. These animals and many others already face threats from humans, sport or trophy hunting should not be made available.

I am against any form of further wildlife persecution by Humans. The reason so many laws are needed in this country is because you can't trust Humans to do the right thing on their own. This is evidenced by Human caused extinction and near extinction of many species. Many have been saved/protected through laws and regulations. I live in the Southeast Longleaf/Wiregrass ecosystem where 90 million acres of Longleaf and associated species have been reduced to approximately 3 million acres thanks to uncontrolled Human greed. Attempts, including my property, are now being made to restore much of that critically important ecosystem through cost-share programs and advice to landowners. I know first-hand the effect of unmitigated habitat and species destruction and what it takes to bring it back. Humans are not the most important species on Earth; a fact that cannot be dis-proven.

I am writing as a forestry professional and an avid outdoors person. Grizzly bears, like other predators, are an essential part of the ecosystem they inhabit and their ability to exist is an indicator of a functioning habitat. More importantly, they are a keystone species in the shaping of the ecosystem. Their protection, through the ESA and beyond is critical at a time when they are losing habitat as a result of a changing climate. I strongly urge the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council to look at the science behind maintaining keystone species and their habitats as a mechanism for maintaining a functioning ecosystem. Decimating the population through trophy hunting will reduce species biodiversity which will directly impact on the health and well-being of the ecosystem they are part of which will impact our own well-being and the resources we rely on for our own well-being..

It is outrageous that more and more hunts are allowed. Wolves and bears need to be protected. Especially from the government agencies that are supposed to protect but instead encourage killing. Facilitate hunts. Disgusting behaviour.

Thought America was a better country than it clearly is. Stop destroying lives. Wolves and bears are more important than farmers fears.

Please enter your comments for the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Q3

Please enter your comments for the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

Grizzly bears have one of the slowest reproductive rates of all terrestrial mammals. A female grizzly can take 10 years to replace herself in the wild, so we may not see the impacts of an aggressive hunt for a decade.

Removing female grizzly bears from the wild could seriously hurt the entire population.

Holding a hunting season so soon after federal protections are lifted is irresponsible and demonstrates why the public majority doesn't trust the state to manage wildlife.

Pregnant bears could be shot during a fall hunting season. And so killing one female bear could equate to the actual removal of what would have been up to five bears from the population.

In 2017 Montana recognized that holding a hunting season soon after delisting was unnecessary. Montana should stand by its original decision and not open a hunting season on grizzlies in the future.

Grizzly bears still occupy less than 5% of their historic range.

Grizzlies in the Yellowstone region are already struggling as a result of dwindling food sources as a result of climate change, invasive species and disease. Since 2015 the population has decreased and mortalities have increased. This isn't the time to introduce a new source of mortality for these bears.

Grizzly bears are solitary animals, and so a hunt won't change their behavior. Dead bears don't learn anything.

The federal government and states have spent millions of dollars recovering this magnificent species from the brink of extinction. Rushing forward with a hunting season so soon after declaring recovery successful is counter-intuitive and may undo all the hard work people have put into recovery.

People travel from all over the world to see a grizzly bear in the wild. The money generated from this tourism contributes greatly to the surrounding states' economies. The money that would be generated by a trophy hunt pales in comparison.

"Management" shouldn't automatically mean "hunting."

Predator populations like grizzly bears are self-controlling; hunting is not needed as a management tool to control the population.

Research has shown that permitting trophy hunting does not increase social tolerance, and may in fact have the opposite effect.

With no buffer around Yellowstone National Park, bears that spend much of their time inside park boundaries accustomed to people could be shot the second they step outside the line. This is unethical. It could also be devastating for park visitors who find out that the bear they saw just yesterday got shot by a trophy hunter.

Please don't allow trophy hunting of grizzlies even after they are removed from the ESA. The ESA is a bare-bones standard designed to prevent species extinction; to actually protect and restore iconic and spectacular creatures like the grizzly, we need to minimize the threat to them. Numbers control for safety is one thing, but trophy hunting is quite another and not at all necessary. Please give these animals the protections they need.

Hello,

I am entirely opposed to allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears esp especially within Wilderness areas. Such proposed hunting runs comoletely contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing their numbers to recover and reoccupy critical habitat so essential for their survival.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states. Even with the protection afforded by the Endangered Species Act (ESA), there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2% of their historic range.

It is reprehensible that Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting is barbaric. There is nothing sporting about shooting down sentient creatures for fun. Grizzly bears are a keystone species; they help to maintain biodiversity, and their extirpation has ripple effects throughout the ecosystem they occupy.

In the last 2 years there have been record-breaking numbers of grizzly deaths in Montana. Do not further imperil the slow and uneven recovery of this species by allowing killing of grizzlies for trophies.

Grizzly bears are important parts of the ecosystems they inhabit. They keep the numbers of other animals, such as deer, from getting out of balance and destroying the flora. There is absolutely no reason for trophy hunting! That action is obscene and disgusting. An animal is killed--not for food--but just to stuff it or put its head on a wall? What kind of a warped human does something like that? A human that has no value for human life, or any other kind of life. We need the grizzlies. We don't need those humans.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. I am writing to strongly oppose any plans that would allow hunting of grizzly bears in Montana's national parks and wildlands. The grizzly bear is a keystone species that is just recovering from our historical mistakes of over-exploitation. Grizzly bears have low reproductive rates and require large areas of specialized habitat; their populations should naturally fluctuate with the environmental conditions, and not be artificially suppressed by trophy hunting. Further, we should not promote the idea that large predators like grizzly bears are something to be feared and killed; this is an old idea that I would have thought our society had moved past. We now know that large predators play extremely valuable roles in ecosystems, and removing them usually has negative and unforeseen consequences. We should heed the advice of Aldo Leopold, who long ago warned us to protect every cog and wheel of the land, and to allow the land to function intact. Grizzly bears are very important cogs in the land mechanism, and they should continue to be protected and valued, not villainized and killed.

PLEASE STOP LISTENING TO THE HUNTERS THAT DON'T CARE IF ANYTHING LIVES.They only take the prize animals and then wonder why the herds are depleting and try to blame it on anything but themselves.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Please do not allow trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Let nature take its course. The bear population depends on habitat conditions, and those conditions will regulate the number of bears. Grizzlies are an integral part of the ecosystem, and their numbers are still low. Please keep the wild places safe for grizzlies. Thank you.

Please do not allow the trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Their numbers have not recovered sufficiently, even if they are delisted from the ESA, and they are an important ecological part of the ecosystem. Wilderness tourism--to watch wildlife, not hunt it--is a huge market, and I hope you would push that. Giving people a chance to see live grizzly bear in nature would be a massive draw to Montana. Thank you, and I hope you will allow the grizzly bear population ample time to recover and repopulate areas native to it.

Please do not allow trophy hunting of the beautiful grizzly bears. These are magnificent special creatures and it is our responsibility as stewards of the earth to protect them.

They are meant to live in these preserve areas a good and natural life. Why would you let anyone go into the very areas that are meant for their survival and meant to encourage their population to grow only to kill them and hang their faces on a wall? This is a hunter's pride? This is bravery to shoot a helpless creature (against a gun) just to show off?

There are so few bears left within the states. They were practically extinct. And their population grows at a slow rate. They are important within ecology to interact with other animals and plants which rely on them and are interdependent. They are also an important symbol of the wild. Why would you let anyone destroy this? You have the most important beautiful creatures live before you, living in nature. DO NOT ALLOW ANYONE TO KILL THEM. NO TROPHY HUNTING!

I AM STANDING UP FOR THE BEARS' RIGHTS. LET THE BEARS LIVE!

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Now is your chance to raise your voice for grizzly bears and tell the State of Montana's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council that you are entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Dear Council

As a tourist to your great state I was awed by the beauty of its wild places and excited at the chance to see animals living in the wild. Even though I didn't see any grizzlies their presence in your wilderness balances all the other species. There is not many of them left and one day I hope to see one and take a photo from a safe distance. That would be one of the best moments of my life. Please dont allow trophy hunting to go ahead. Take pictures of live bears living in nature not dead bodies that you are proud of shooting and pushing towards extinction.

Please do not allow the trophy hunting of grizzly bears! How can anyone justify an killing animal simply to be able to show friends/family/the world that they've....killed an animal?! Where is the goodness in that? Does that actually make some people feel big, powerful, important....? It's a mentality that I (and 100% of people I know) will never understand. Grizzly bear trophy hunting should not be allowed just because some people find joy in killing & advertising that they killed a large animal. What a waste-- & surely a terrible disruption to grizzly bear families & populations. Please say NO to trophy hunting & allow grizzlies to live out their lives in peace! Thank you.

Iconic species. We look for grizzlies when visiting the West. It is not our place to feel we are above sentient animals. Grizzlies have a place in the ecosystem. Enough with ranchers. On one trip saw livestock outside the fences. The world is moving towards a "green" way of life regardless.

If you follow your plans to allow the hunting of bears so someone can stuff it and put it in their den thinking that makes him a man
And they become extinct what are you going to tell your great grand children when they see a picture of a bear and they ask pop pop why aren't there any bears how are you going to explain that's because of your actions, or lack of actions that there are no more bears.
That all you thought about is the mighty dollar and not the lives of innocent animals

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear. I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Montana should not permit trophy hunting for grizzlies. The wilderness belongs to all the citizens of the United States, not just those living in Montana, and not just hunters. We urge you to keep protecting grizzlies as a keystone species in wilderness areas, letting their population fluctuate with food available to them in the area. Too many grizzlies are already killed by accidents and by ranchers protecting livestock.

I am apposed to the proposal to commence trophy hunting if Grizzly bears are delisted from the Endangered Species Act. This will put the species right back in jeopardy. Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

I believe according to Wilderness Watch "today there are only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, etc. The last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana." Please protect the grizzly bear. Let us be good stewards of the gift God gave us - the Earth. Thank you.

I am opposed to trophy hunting in general. We no longer have the luxury of killing animals for fun. At least the big ones like Bear, puma, or other animals from other countries. It needs to stop. If a person hunts for food or in kills in self defense, so be it. Grizzlies are struggling already. Killing them for fun should have strict consequences instead of a hand clap. I grew up Methodist, but no longer go to church, but I am aware that killing for fun has never been part of the Christian ethic. We are "supposed" to be caring for the planet and all the wild life on it. Please stop this plan.

I am entirely opposed to allowing barbaric trophy hunting, especially on our public lands.
Grizzley bears are an important part of the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit.
Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.
Grizzly bears have only recovered about 2% of their numbers since near extinction in 1975, with approximately only 1500 now populated in the contiguous 48 states due to their very low reproductive rates.
Please DO NOT allow Trophy Hunting on public lands, including wild lands in America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

I strongly believe that Montana should NOT open up hunting for grizzly bears. As "The Last Best Place," we should not backtrack on the things that make our home so unique. Obviously, people do not want to hunt grizzlies for food, and I do not believe that trophy hunting is an ethical act. It is best to maintain a genetically diverse population of bears. We are a better state than Wyoming, and need to continue to demonstrate that.

Do not allow trophy hunting of Grizzly bears. Bears are important for the ecological balance of nature. They deserve to be allowed to live their lives in their own habitat and to raise their cubs in peace.

They were not created to be shot by gun happy humans who want a trophy head above their fireplace, a bearskin rug in front of their couch, or chest thumping bragging rights to one-up their buddies. Go to the shooting range if you must shoot something. Leave the grizzlies alone.

I have enough trouble fining the antelope, now chased off by urban sprawl, so let's at least not popularize the killing of grizzlies or other wildlife. I like 'em alive to see and hear.

The grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I say if you want to "Trophy" hunt, put down your gun and wrestle the bear with a knife. That's a "Trophy" kill! It takes limited skill to shoot a very large, slowly moving target who by the way is just looking for some berries and fish to eat, and has no idea you are about to end his innocent life for NO reason. Hunting for sport is cruel, barbaric, and really have we not yet evolved. Hunting any living creature for sport, should be banned globally. Every animal serves a purpose in supporting its local ecosystem, and when we upset that balance for entertainment purposes, it has irreparable consequences to the environment and the wildlife. If you love nature, stop destroying in the name of entertainment.

As a hunter I am confused as to why this is even being considered. Not only are these animals rare, but necessary for the ecosystem. You have a unique situation in your beautiful state to use what you have as a draw as a vast majority of people are opposed to killing Grizzlies. Besides, most hunters because of the cost, won't be able to pursue this. It is about a minority of so called hunters with money wanting to say they killed something most will never be able to afford.

Thank You

Grizzly bears have been in the United States since before we immigrated here. Man thinks he is in control of everything, and must have everything to his liking. Also too many feel that being able to kill an animal raises their status with society. False if they need that they are severely void of self worth. We have taken whatever we want without regard for others or animals. It's time for a change --- let animals live in their environment without trophy hunting. Not to mention dangers of shooting guns in public areas where some one may be killed instead of a bear. There are restrictions in place to keep guns and hunting out of these areas so people can enjoy the wilderness in safety. Please do not allow grizzlies to be hunted as trophies. Thank you.

I am highly opposed to the hunting of grizzly bears. The ratio of predators to prey is already out of balanced, as evidenced by over abundance of deer. Nature will restore the balance if we do not tinker with her. I have visited Montana and love her wild nature. Please dont take that away.

There is no valid reason that these majestic animals should be hunted. They help to keep the population of grazing animals in check and in fact are more of a plant eater than they are a meat eater. I urge you to NOT let bears be hunted.

Wildlife is a national and state treasure. Please do not allow trophy hunting.

There are only about 1500 grizzly bears left in the wild, many in your own state.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

PLEASE DO NOT ALLOW TROPHY HUNTING

Although it is accepted as an appropriate activity in many part of the country, Trophy hunting is about as unethical as you can get. Think about it for a second. It involves humans being empowered to kill something in order to gain a sense of joy. Make no mistake that it will produce a rush of adrenaline for the individuals doing the killing. As humans, we evolved to be effective hunters and one of the necessary hallmarks of our evolved psychology was to gain a sense of joy during the hunt. This applies to all phases - scanning, pursuing, and finally killing the targeted species. By programming our neural networks to produce a feeling of joy, it ensured that individuals would be encouraged to hunt. That was a good thing from an evolutionary perspective, because hunting (and especially successful hunting) led to significant benefits. So what we are dealing with is an evolved psychology i n humans and especially males (who did the majority of the hunting). However, just because we find joy in an activity, it does not mean that you condone it and encourage it. In fact this is what the meaning of will power is all about - to overcome the underlying desires. So, we desires to fill joy by taking drugs, but that does not mean that we should encourage recreational drug use because there are detrimental side effects. Shooting grizzly bears also has detrimental side effects - namely the death os a magnificent creature who should not be killed just so some human can gain a rush of joy. It is the epitome of weakness if you encourage this activity. You will be displaying your own weakness by giving into the call to serve the appetites of humans at the cost of killing another being that is worth far more than a momentary euphoric hiccup for a human. The essentials of this ethical situation are clear and it is up to you to do what is obviously the right thing from an ethical perspective. Do you have the fortitude to stand up to the whimsical passions of humans or are you not fit to lead them in the appropriate direction? This is what you need to ask yourself in this issue. If you can't stand up and say no, then you ought to get out of the business of leading because you don't have the strength to do the right thing!

Trophy hunting is simply unconscionable and offers no REAL benefit to anyone, only serving to minimize the importance of life for the sake of the the pride of the single individual hunter wo wants to hang a trophy on his wall. We are losing species diversity very quickly and there is no defensible reason to add to the problem.

Trophy hunting of any wild animal but especially the Grizzly Bear should be avoided in the lower 48. The Grizz is just now rebounding and given that we, as humans, have limited the area they can live in makes this even more dire. Please do not make it open trophy season on the Grizzly Bear. Allowing trophy hunters to kill grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs counter to the importance of increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the bear to reoccupy critical habitat that is essential to its recovery and long-term persistence.

Grizzlies are keystone species--few in number but critical to shaping the ecosystems in which they live. Population numbers should fluctuate as habitat conditions, food, and climate conditions change. They should not be controlled by trophy hunting.

Thank you for your consideration.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Keystone species are species that inhabit an area and are vital for that area to remain healthy and "in balance". If trophy hunting is allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear and these ecosystem will not function to the full capacity that they should. They will be depleted. This world must have healthy, functioning ecosystems for life on this earth to continue as we know it. Too many of our ecosystems have been depleted or destroyed already.

As an Ecologist and a citizen of this country, I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival and the health of the ecosystems.

Please no trophy hunting for grizzly bears!

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Best regards
Ramona Krause

I am opposed to allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas. Instead, the grizzly bear populations must be allowed to recover, increase and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. Culling the populations by allowing them to be hunted as trophies is wrong. Speaking as a scientist, I emphasize that these bears must be viewed as a critical component of the Wilderness ecosystems they inhabit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

If trophy hunting is allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I strongly encourage you to not allow grizzly bear hunting in Montana.
Thank you.

There is absolutely no reason to allow the hunting of grizzly bears in Montana. I went to visit relatives after a few years and was completely appalled at the lack of wildlife and I know all the great spots where I used to see them. Wildlife viewing is far more more lucrative than hunting and less invasive. These majestic bears are the icon of Montana. Please do not allow any of them to be shot in any way shape or form. They are important to me, the ecology and the future economy of the state.

Please enter your comments for the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

The grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch's logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Now is your chance to raise your voice for grizzly bears and tell the State of Montana's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council that you are entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

I oppose trophy hunting of grizzly bears. These iconic animals need protection as their reproduction rate is low and they were already endangered once. Instead of hunting and killing, Eco-tourism photography opportunities would an alternative. I'd travel to your state to do this. Please revere these animals. I am an ecologist and educator in Durham, North Carolina. I am writing in opposition to trophy hunting of grizzly bears. They play important roles in western ecosystems, affecting plant and animal populations alike, as well as the structure of natural communities. People should not be killing them indiscriminately, especially not for the whims of trophy hunters. This provides no benefit to the world at large, and yet it carries with it a cost that we will never recover from if bear populations get too low, and they are more threatened with extinction. Please do not allow trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Thank you for taking the time to read my comments.

I am greatly opposed to allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears in Montana. They were once very close to extinction, which is why they were put on the ESA list in 1975. They have still not recovered in numbers since then and will be a grave mistake to open them up for trophy hunting. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. Grizzly bears are a keystone species that are currently found in less than 2% of their historic range. These animals have an oversize impact on their ecosystems and should absolutely be left alone to help regulate the other natural flora and fauna. Trophy hunting is a sad relic of a bygone era and is indefensible for endangered animals with such a low reproductive rate. Humans are part of the intricately connected web of life and if we don't preserve that, we will fall also when it collapses.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Dear Advisory Council,

I am writing to oppose the proposed trophy hunting of grizzly bears if they are de-listed from the ESA. I have long disagreed with the view that as soon as a species has recovered sufficiently that it can come out of Endangered status it is immediately open to being hunted, potentially right back into Endangered-qualified numbers. There must be Protected status from that point that it allows it to further recover on its own, without needing the active processes that come into play with Endangered status. Yes, eventually hunting would be allowed, but it should not be this binary choice that now exists. It is especially annoying that a desire for trophy hunting is driving this current analysis.

Thrill killing is a barbaric hobby. People that still maintain this mentality should join the military. I did join the USMC and it taught me that hunting should be left on the battlefield not in our wilderness areas, parklands or lands adjacent to parks. Only emotional immature humans thrill kill. They shouldn't be allowed to own guns. Take it from a Marine, I know.

Trophy hunting of Grizzly Bears, any animal, is morally wrong and upsets the balance of nature. I oppose trophy hunting of any kind for sport and recreation. We are a better society than that. Because Grizzly Bears are already on the Endangered Species List I want you to do everything possible to protect them from trophy hunting throughout your state. Whatever changes in the laws you need to make for better protection, please do it. It is up to you to follow the suggestions of the American people that speak out for the animals that are unable to speak for themselves. Thank you

f trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Q3

Please enter your comments for the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

Dear Grizzly Bear Advisory Committee Members,

Thank you for the opportunity to comment on this important issue, please accept these comments on behalf of the Western Watersheds Project. The issue of livestock-grizzly conflict is a huge issue, yet is largely absent from the Working Group Skeletal Framework Drafts. We appreciate that there is an entire meeting dedicated to the discussion of this topic and hope that you will consider the following recommendations regarding livestock-grizzly conflicts.

Between 1997 and 2017, over 70 percent of all grizzly bear mortalities in the Greater Yellowstone Ecosystem stemmed from anthropogenic causes. Of these, at least 86 resulted from conflicts with livestock. If this is any indication for the direction of grizzly bear management in the rest of the state, something needs to change. This month, two young male grizzly bears were killed due to livestock conflicts. This is not a good start to the year, and with limited information about what conflict prevention measures were employed by the ranchers, we are left to wonder what, if anything, is being done to avoid lethal removal of grizzlies. In fact, in the case of one of these bears, FWP states that "the rancher is working with the local Blackfoot Challenge watershed group to set up an electric fence to help prevent future livestock depredations," suggesting that the loss of livestock and this grizzly bear could have been prevented were adequate conflict prevention techniques employed. This issue must be given higher importance in your future discussions and management recommendations to avoid unnecessary killing of grizzly bears in the future.

So far, in the Working Group Skeletal Framework Drafts, non-lethal deterrence measures are barely discussed. Implementing conflict prevention measures statewide should be of the highest priority. Residents in the Blackfoot Valley saw a 96 percent reduction in reported verifiable human-grizzly conflicts between 2003-2010 following the implementation of conflict prevention measures. This led to a drastic decrease in human caused grizzly bear mortality even as the grizzly bear population continued to increase.

Several council member working groups mentioned the need for increased funding for grizzly programs, and we agree that funding for conflict prevention measures should be increased to ensure that livestock producers are implementing conflict prevention measures. Grizzly bears are native to this landscape and therefore Montanans should work to co-exist with these bears even if that means altering animal husbandry techniques. We recognize the challenges associated with this and are supportive of funding to assist in the implementation of conflict prevention measures.

Techniques that have been proven successful at conflict prevention are: electric fencing of private property, particularly calving areas; removal of birthing material; removal and composting of carcasses; a neighbor-to-neighbor communication network; a waste management program; and range riding. Implementation of these conflict prevention measures is paramount. Lethal removal of a grizzly bear should be an absolute last step only after appropriate non-lethal measures have been implemented.

Additionally, we would like to highlight what presenters Garth Mowat and Larry VanDale said about livestock-grizzly conflict in British Columbia and Alaska. Both of these presenters said that livestock producers are not compensated for the loss of livestock, but that losing livestock to grizzly bears is simply a part of living where grizzly bears are, and that livestock producers have instead had to alter their animal husbandry practices to reduce livestock losses to grizzlies. By providing guidelines for how to avoid livestock depredation and resources to assist with implementing these changes, the state of Montana is doing more than enough to subsidize the livelihoods of ranchers.

The discussion of increased funding for livestock loss compensation must be accompanied by a discussion of funds for prevention measures. In fact, we think that it would be reasonable for livestock producers to receive compensation for livestock lost to grizzly bear conflict only if they have implemented adequate conflict prevention measures. If there is no incentive to implement conflict prevention measures we will continue to see unnecessary killings of grizzly bears.

There are currently tools available through the Livestock Loss Board:

Money from the federal grant has been used to fund range riders, carcass removal, fladry projects and the purchase of guard dogs.

Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council Public Comments

Board members decided to try something new a few years ago. They bought an enclosed trailer and filled it with loss prevention tools. The first year the tools could only be used for wolf loss prevention projects. Now they can be used for grizzly loss prevention as well. A partnership was formed with USDA Wildlife Services where they supply personnel to take the trailer and supplies out to ranchers so they can try out loss prevention tools. The idea behind this was that some loss prevention methods may be too expensive for a rancher to try out. By trying out the tools they can see if it works for their ranch.

However, the fund is set up to receive excess money from the compensation fund, of which there was none from 2019. This structure does not address the pressing need to be proactive when it comes to grizzly-livestock conflicts. Money and time spent on conflict prevention measures benefit all involved. If funding for conflict prevention measures were increased immediately, the state would not only save money on livestock compensation losses, but we would also see a reduction in the unnecessary lethal removal of grizzly bears. This model is currently being used for wolf conflicts with more money being available for loss prevention than compensation, and now you must urge the governor to make a similar fund available for grizzly programs at the state level.

One last factor that must be addressed by this council is that of public lands grazing. The responsibility for coexistence on public lands should be placed on the livestock producers bringing cattle into native grizzly bear habitat. Livestock producers must implement the same conflict prevention techniques on public lands. By putting emphasis on conflict prevention measures we can avoid the unnecessary killing of grizzly bears and instead see Montana's grizzly bear population continue to rebound.

Sincerely,

Jocelyn Leroux

I am writing to express my opposition to the proposal of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. The Endangered Species Act still protects them, and even if they do get de-listed, they are still far from recovering. There are only about 1,500 left, and they live on just 2% of their prior habitat. This is short-sighted decision by Advisory Council that at best only benefits a select few within the state, and not the vast majority of Americans who support the protection of grizzly bears and the ESA. Please do not follow through with any proposal that allows for the hunting of these bears. Thank you for your time and attention on this matter.

Hi:

I don't live in the west, but have hiked or camped many times in western wilderness areas. I'm glad the west is there for all Americans. I used to be a hunter, but find trophy hunting quite offputting, to kill a magnificent animal just to please the human ego. I agree with Wilderness Watch on the wisdom of letting nature itself limit grizzly populations. I know that other factors come into play, chiefly the conflict between humans and grizzly range, but large wild animals are disappearing throughout the world, and I fear that in a hundred years they'll mostly be gone. I say let them be. Trophy hunters of course contribute money to the Montana state economy, but the money that comes in seems paltry in comparison to what might be lost. So I'm with Wilderness Watch in asking you to reconsider trophy hunting for grizzlies.

Thank you.

Dear Sir or Madam,

I am completely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing these iconic bears to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not human-imposed population limits. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Respectfully,

Dear Governor,

Our country is losing our wild heritage at an alarming rate and with the grizzly bear, it's just one more case for preserving what America is blessed to have in its history. Your state is so unique, out of the lower 48 states to have this resource, I wish more states had this option. Please help preserve your grizzly's for all Americans. This is one, natural resource that sets your state apart from almost all others in the United States! Thank you,

Respectively,
Jerry Hughes

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

The allowing of trophy hunting of Grizzlies is unconscionable. The Grizzly is currently under the protection of the ESA, which means the population is near extinction. Even being de-listed it means the Grizzly population numbers will still be exceedingly low. Once delisted they will be targeted by farmers and hunters alike and you will set what little progress has been made under the ESA to restore the Grizzly population. Your proposed move to allow trophy hunting is going to put the Grizzly right back on the ESA list.

This is not to mention the immorality of taking a life for sport and it doesn't matter whether that life is human or not. Killing for the sake of killing should not be encouraged on any level, especially to augment some twisted sense of domination.

The grizzly bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

The grizzly is going to be struggling for survival as human population continues to increase and development takes away more and more of their habitat. Montana is one of the few places left for them. This is NOT time in our history that the grizzly should be hunted for trophies. Killing them just for the gratification of men who think their penises are too small and have something to prove by putting their head on their wall is NOT a good reason. Neither is the extra dollars the state can make from this. You can find a much better way to bring money into the state than destroying these magnificent bears. And as you know, trophy hunters kill the very best ones -- the strongest and most spectacular ones -- the very who should be breeding and passing their genes on to the next generation. Protect our bears and DO NOT allow trophy hunting!!!!!!

This iconic creature still has very low population numbers. We need every Grizzly to keep the gene pool diverse. I am a strong proponent of the Yellowstone to Yukon Initiative. It is only through this collaborative effort that we can save this magnificent animal. Trophy hunting shouldn't even enter into this equation. Thank you for the opportunity to comment on this important issue.

Any type of Trophy hunting of animals should be banned. Trophy hunters should only be allowed to hunt each other.

Grizzly bears are federally protected as an endangered species under the endangered species act. Given their status, ecological importance, and long life history traits that make them vulnerable to decline of this species, it is entirely reasonable that the federal government is right in protected grizzly bears. States are legally required to follow the law and should not be exempt. Furthermore, with power comes responsibility and state governments should be setting an example to uphold the law of our country rather than outright breaking it. How else can the citizens of the USA be expected to follow the law?

I do not support and strongly condemn any efforts to allow hunting of grizzly bears in Montana. Grizzlies as a species are extremely sensitive to human interaction. Hunting will have a detrimental effect on the species as a whole and likely result in far greater bear deaths and stress-related human interactions than anticipated. How can an agency charged with maintaining healthy populations of wildlife for posterity consider hunting for a species still protected under the Endangered Species Act? Why would the agency's first impulse be to allow hunting once a bare minimum of the species is alive? This is not a recovered species and this hunting proposal plan is immoral insanity.

In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Please let nature be nature. These amazing animals were almost hunted to extinction in 1975, and despite being protected under the ESA, numbskulls have still been hunting them. They NEED protection - what they don't need are folks out there trying to show how manly they are by killing an animal with a gun and then displaying it in their "trophy" room. If you do want to allow "trophy hunting", which is pointless and disgusting in itself, why don't you make it a fair fight? Instead of using guns to hunt, where an animal literally stands no chance to survive, make humans hunt with equipment that actually takes skill to use, like bows or knives. If the human wins, fine...if the bear wins it just means there's one less idiot out there.

We have a huge impact on the earth and everything that lives here. We may alter grizzly bears by hunting. The bears that are somewhat tolerant of humans will be the first to be killed because of that trait. In the future, the bears that survived will be the very wary. Then, we as humans will not have the joy of watching them and the ones we do encounter will be even more dangerous to humans because of their genetic inheritance.

Please do not allow trophy hunting of grizzly bears!

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Dear Montana FW&P, we lost our grizzlies entirely in California. Totally extirpated. As an avid outdoorsman I do not support hunting of grizzlies. I do plan to visit your state, spend dollars supporting the local economy, and go fly fishing in the Bob Marshal Wilderness one day. I really hope to be in the Bob in peace and quite on the river without hunters scouring the hillsides for Grizzlies. Just as Grizzlies are the crux of being delisted, we shouldn't immediately open them up for hunting. That would be like celebrating a success by cutting it off at the legs. Give them some reprieve.

Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Maybe we should have an open season on this council so that a few of their heads could serve as trophies on someones wall. These so called hunters are only out to have another trophy they can put on the wall. They probably do not even eat the meat or use the hide for anything useful. All they are after is bragging rights!

I am a hunter myself but I DO NOT hunt for trophies I EAT what I KILL and that is the ONLY reason that I hunt.

Maybe if these trophy hunters were going to eat what they KILL it would be better. But that IS NOT what MOST of these FOOLS are out for!

I understand that even though grizzly bears are still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Thank you for accepting comments on grizzly bear management in Montana. I am adamantly opposed to any hunting of grizzly bears at any time. Grizzlies have been reduced to only a minuscule fraction of their native range, despite their important place in the wild. We should protect the grizzly wherever it still roams by learning to adjust how we live on the land, and we should encourage grizzlies to repopulate areas they once lived. The wild places of our state are one of the best reasons for living here and we need to protect these places and their wildlife.

The grizzly bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams. Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range.

Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Please do not allow hunting of grizzly's in Montana. Doing so will undo all the years of protection and planning, and result in loss of the last place in the lower 48 where the specie can survive without threat of being hunted.

Please do not allow the hunting or disturbance of grizzly bears, which have had far too much interference from our species. It is very sad to see the image of a grizzly on the California flag, when they have been so terribly threatened. A creature like this deserves our utmost respect, not unnecessary and premature death.

Apex predators are vital to healthy ecosystems, which in turn are best for both humans and animals. Please don't allow trophy hunting of grizzly bears. These creatures face enough challenges with climate change and habitat destruction. They don't need to be stalked by idiots that want to put their heads on a wall.

I think grizzly bear hunting and killing in this day and age of a major environmental/climate crisis is a total aberration, not at all commonsensical, very cruel and unnecessary, and downright stupid, given the collapse and demise of so many of our species. We do not need to add the grizzly to that, given it is a keystone species that basically helps our environment and us (stupid, callous) humans to survive. I worry that the Advisory council, like so many of these groups, is in the grip of the gun and hunting lobbies – perhaps I am wrong on that, but their lack of sound, scientific-based, and compassionate action to date would indicate that they will end up supporting yet more large predator, such as the grizzly-bear, killing.

Please enter your comments for the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

"No Trophy Hunting"

The grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch's logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Now is your chance to raise your voice for grizzly bears and tell the State of Montana's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council that you are entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

As a native of Missoula, I have spent many summers hiking in the Bob Marshall wilderness, and treasure this unique area with its unparalleled beauty. The grizzly bear is as much of a symbol of the wild of Montana as the bison. These bears and ALL wildlife in Montana need to be protected for generations to come. Allowing trophy hunters to even come into our state says how little we care about its inhabitants. You MUST do EVERYTHING in your power to protect the Grizzly bear and all wildlife in Montana. If you allow trophy hunters to enter Montana, you will be overrun and our ecosystem will be disrupted forever. PLEASE PLEASE PROTECT OUR WILDLIFE!!

I urge you to review scientific data on the specifics of Grizzly Bears; their habitat, place among the species, benefit to nature by way of keeping certain populations in check, benefits to controlling nature through their vegetarian diet of plants/berries eaten then seeds dispersed in their feces, value to tourism through sightings, and the real criteria of how their status became protected and why. I hope those that do actually take the time to do independent reviews of scientific data not corrupted by special interests, will realize the positive movement since their protection is still only allowing them a very small livelihood zone and a very small population compared with as little as 30 years ago. I urge Montana to not become the State that instigates a reversal of positive effort and result, especially not at the cost to a keystone predator species already regularly killed by other human means such as vehicles and farmland "control". I thank you for reading my plea. Sincerely, Diana Mucha

With all due respect, I am sorry to say that it would be irresponsible to allow trophy hunting of the iconic grizzly bears. This animal is on the endangered list and has to be allowed to recover. Furthermore Bears and other wildlife are worth more alive than as a wall ornament for the tourism they attract to the states they live in.

I am opposed to trophy hunting of Grizzly Bears. Subsistence hunting is an entirely different thing from hunting just to hang a bear's head on a wall and brag to your friends about it. Grizzlies have enough to contend with between habitat depletion and climate change. Don't let trophy hunters create an additional hurdle for their survival.

My family and I are very invested in supporting wildlife and wild places. It is critical that we continue to preserve and protect our wild lands and creatures. It is incredibly sad that our country only has 1,500 grizzlies at this time. We should do far more to protect our top predators as they are key to healthy ecosystems. My family holds family reunions at national parks and in national forests to support our wildlife. Please, please consider banning hunting of any kind of these magnificent creatures. Trophy hunting of grizzlies when they are so rare is abhorrent. Thank you for your consideration.

Trophy hunting is neither conservative nor progressive. It is a travesty to God's creation and another indication of how depraved humans can be. If a grizzly is actively threatening human lives on an ongoing basis, euthanizing MIGHT be considered as a LAST RESORT, but attacks on living beings for sport should be a crime.

Please enter your comments for the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

The Grizzly Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the Great Bear still roams.

Grizzly Bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover Grizzly Bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 Grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states, and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range.

Grizzly Bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking Grizzly deaths in Montana. Even though the Grizzly Bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of Grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of Grizzly Bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks. If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would NO LONGER be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where Grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live. I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of Grizzly Bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot Grizzly Bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing Grizzly Bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival; MOREOVER, there is no rational purpose for Trophy Hunting — these so-called "hunters" (depravely cruel) MUST find another way to get their jollies and leave our ANIMALS ALONE — LET our Grizzlies LIVE.

Please remember, the Grizzly Bear represents many things to a large population of diverse people. Therefore, to have a hunt just to please a few is foolishness. The bear's comeback was a result of this diverse group people working together so the bear is once again part of the ecosystem. It gives me a good feeling to know that more people see the wisdoms in healthy ecosystems.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Please do not allow hunting of grizzly bears.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Do you really need this during this time? To kill more things on this planet? How about a change for once? It won't be long before we will be saying to others about "I saw one in the wild a long time ago", about animals that we consider common and plentiful. The fact is they are not common or plentiful. For once try protecting something instead of destroying it with a bullet or arrow and the horrific pain and terror it causes.

I am opposed to trophy hunting of grizzlies. Ecosystems exist to provide proper habitats and irresponsibly reducing the number of grizzlies (already dangerously small) will cause the ecosystem to be compromised. Trophy hunters should be banned rather than allowing them to feed their greed by wantonly destroying wildlife.

Grizzly bears are a crucial part of the ecosystem and they have just as much right to be here as we do. By respecting nature, we continue to have a place to live. We are not the only creatures on this planet, we need other species to survive, and the Earth is more powerful than us all. The planet will survive, even if that means getting rid of its inhabitants in order to do so. We need to respect, be kind, and be grateful for the constant gifts we are given in order to survive and live our lives to the fullest. Being respectful means learning to cohabitate with amazing creatures and understanding we have no more right than they to enjoy this planet. We need to stop fearing them, but rather learn from them and respect them, instead of and causing pain and death and eventual extinction.

Send those hunters home, where maybe they can do some good in this country. People are dying all over the country. We don't need more death here. Dear Council:

In my 76 + years I have spent a considerable;le amount of time in Montana's wilderness and National Parks, especially Glacier National Park, hiking with Seattle Mountaineers and also with my two adult children. I took them to GNP so they could experience and learn to respect the awesome beauty of true wilderness.

The idea of trophy hunting of top and endangered predators in these spectacular wild places is nauseous to me. Wild animals and wilderness do not exist to be violated for "sport" to boost the egos of maniacs with guns. Even thinking about allowing trophy hunting for Grizzly Bears is unconscionable, and must never be allowed.

Do your duty to protect wilderness and its denizens, who deserve to live in peace without human interference. That is, after all, why wilderness was officially created in The Wilderness Act of 1964!

Thank you.

Trophy Hunting

The grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch's logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Dear Council,

As a native Montanan and hunter, I want to express my opposition to allowing hunting of grizzlies in our state, regardless of whether they continue to be protected by the endangered species act.

The bears still face an uphill battle to recover to anything resembling their natural historic numbers and range. Trophy hunting would bring with it many issues that could be detrimental to this recovery, as well as unnecessary fights and negative publicity in our state.

Thank you for your time.

I have spent time in Montana hiking and camping, and have seen grizzly bears on several occasions, at a distance. They are a magnificent creature, and should be protected.

Hunters cannot help themselves their greed and trophies, bragging rights, but the grizzly bear should not be the target of this unsustainable greed. They are not the only ones with an interest in wilderness, and public lands, the rest of us who live and enjoy the peace and quiet of these area have equal or MORE rights than simply going to destroy an animal , a rare animal.

From this last crisis we just went through, it is so important to have areas that people can go, feel safe, not threatened to enjoy peach and quiet, clean air, without having that peacefulness broken by sounds of gunfire.

Hunters have plenty of places to practice their sport, WITHOUT going into wilderness, and public lands. Besides, in case no one is aware, those type of hunters are a thing of the past!!!

Please enter your comments for the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

As a frequent backpacker and hiker in Montana, particularly in Glacier and the Bob Marshall Wilderness, I want to state my firm, adamant opposition to grizzly bear trophy hunting. Why do my family and I want to visit Montana? Because we know it is home to many large predators who have been extirpated in other states. In many states, Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Trophy hunting of grizzly bears should not be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am urging the State of Montana's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council that to oppose trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

I am an attorney in Washington State. I am a former chairperson of the Washington State Bar Association's Animal Law Section. My comments are my own and do not represent the views of either the Bar Association or the Animal Law Section. My reason for writing is to state that I am absolutely opposed to the killing of grizzly bears for trophy hunters.

It is my understanding that Montana allows bear baiting, and this is, in no way, a "sport." Using high-powered guns to kill bears is not a sport.

Sadly, some people find a great deal of joy and satisfaction in killing animals and mounting their heads on walls so the killer can constantly admire his or her work. Numerous psychological studies have demonstrated the close links between killing animals and human violence. Killing animals is, by its very nature, violent and bloody.

The grizzly bear population has not sufficiently recovered so that killing them should be permitted. Killing animals for fun is an activity that is fraught with psychological issues. Trophy hunting is something that is about 100 years out-of-date and should be relegated to history.

"No Trophy Hunting"

Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear. As a hunter, fisherman and prior employee of the US Forest Service and BLM, I feel that it is unnecessary to allow the hunting of top tier predators such as the Grizzly bear because of their importance to the ecosystem they're living in. There is a critical balance in all ecosystems and those balances are easily disrupted because of shortsighted measures like trophy hunting the wrong species. The Grizzly is the wrong species to be hunted in their current ranges at this current time.

Now that the grizzly bear has recovered from near extinction in the lower 48 it is important to maintain that status, not open the state up for hunting this iconic animal. Hunting grizzlies so some so called macho hunter can display a head on his wall is sick. I am strongly against the proposed hunting of this species.

I'm not sure why ANY wildlife council would consider a hunt as a means of wildlife control .. especially when it comes to grizzly bears. The economics of it is irresponsible! You get a one time fee for the "chance" to kill a grizzly when, you can get millions over the course of a year from ecotourism. People, AMERICANS

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Grizzlies are mostly extinct in their former habitat, the lower 48 states. Please do not take away their protection in Montana, by permitting routine shooting of Grizzlies-- under any circumstances. As top predators, these bears are vitally important to the health of the plants and animals in their habitat. When there's a healthy Grizzly bear population, the rest of the wildlife-- plants and animals-- also is healthy, in balance with its top predator.

Should trophy hunting be permitted in Montana, great wildernesses-- Beartooth, great Bear, and others-- once a haven for these bears, will be death traps.

I urge you, help protect this wild animal: do not permit trophy hunting of Grizzly bears in Montana.

Please do not allow the hunting of grizzly bears in Montana. Montana is so lucky to have some of the last fully intact ecosystems in the Lower 48. That special feature attracts thousands of visitors to the state from around the world each year. The presence of a viable grizzly bear population is a large part of what attracts these visitors. Allow the bears to be hunted and not only does it become harder for visitors to see the bears, but the reputation of the state is damaged, making it a less attractive state to visit for many.

One of my great memories is of seeing wild grizzlies in Glacier National Park. Please don't destroy my fond memories of Montana by permitting the hunting of bears. Let there be just one place in the Lower 48 where bears can continue to roam free without fear of being harmed.

Thanks for your consideration.

Grizzly bears are necessary to help keep herd populations under control.

Shooting wild animals for sport is barbaric.

Please do not allow hunters to destroy these magnificent animals.

Don't allow your state to make grizzly bears extinct.

I am opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Grizzly bears are part of the ecosystem and do not belong dead on or in the homes of people. Hunters should envision their own head or hides as trophies

Grizzly bears are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Thank you for your consideration.

Grizzly bears although an iconic American species akin to the bald eagle is on a far different course than its avian counterpart. Various estimates project fewer than 2000 bears living and taking up only a small fraction of their historic range. They continue to face immense obstacles to recover their historic numbers as they suffer from various encroachments. Please do not subject grizzlies to the whims of the trophy hunting industry whose motivation is their exploitation and ultimate demise all for plunder and profit.

Do Not allow murdering of OUR Grizzly Bears!!!!!!!

They belong here; they belong to ME and all the other people who love grizzlies! They are vital to a healthy ecosystem and THEY are a KEYSTONE species: necessary for the environment AND THIS IS PUBLIC LAND! Their numbers are still very low and you have a responsibility to PROTECT THEM!!! These lands belong to all of us and we have a right to know our Grizzly Bears are safe and thriving. Murdering a Grizzly is EVIL AND SHORTSIGHTED, NOT BRAVE. MURDERERS SHOULD BE PUNISHED NOT GIVEN A TROPHY; HOW WEAK ARE THOSE MURDER INNOCENT WILDLIFE WHO HAVE NO WEAPON. You have the ability to just say NO. Do the right thing for Grizzlies, the other species who depend on them and Montana.

On my many backpacks and hikes I have seen signs of grizzlies, yet only observed one once; it is a memory that will last forever, a feeling of pure joy, watching this magnificent animal as it foraged for ground squirrel and playfully loped downhill in the wind.

I consider myself blessed to not envision myself, or humans, as better than, or more intelligent than, other animals. We all share the earth, and everything on it is here for a reason, everything likes its life, enjoys life. We humans are the only being who imagine ourselves somehow capable of greater thought, and yet are the only creature who has nearly destroyed our planet and all its inhabitants.

The Grizzly deserves to live out its life free from death at the hands of small-minded people with big guns. Wherever the environment is considered expansive enough for grizzlies to roam, they need to be completely protected from killing and harm of any kind.

I urge your support to protect and maintain our grizzly bear populations. I recognize GB's have been a challenge for some ranchers however there are means to mitigate this this without having to destroy them. I understand the pros and cons of controversy but removing their protection is not the solution. Our eco system is frail, don't feel that eradicating GB's is the solution. Think outside the box, find other ways to protect your livestock thereby protecting GB's. Let's call it "balance."

Especially abhorrent, would be allowing "trophy" hunters to kill these beautiful animals, just for the sake of killing. How pathetic. When will humans learn to stop messing with wildlife and the natural world they inhabit?! Killing grizzly bears, runs contrary to increasing their numbers and allowing them to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Humans can never make up for the previous destruction we've inflicted on wildlife and their habitats, but it's time to be good role models for our children, by respecting and protecting wildlife, from now on.

Please enter your comments for the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

The Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

If trophy hunting is allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

I urge you to reject the foolish idea of of allowing grizzly bear hunting anywhere in Montana. If you end up allowing it, I will surely contribute some money to organizations that will fight it in court and cancel our plans to visit your state this summer to run a couple of backcountry rivers.

Thanks for considering my comments.

I am completely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

More tourists come for the chance to see a live grizzly bear than for a chance to shoot one.

I really find it disturbing that Montana Fish and Wildlife would consider trophy hunting of grizzly bears in the wilderness. This species is just starting to make a comeback in numbers in territories that can sustain them, by which I mean having available food, enough space for each pack family, safety for the cubs, etc. I often say to people that we need to be the stewards of the land and the animals that reside there. We are nothing without the ecosystem, a BALANCED ecosystem and grizzly bears are a unique, threatened part of that ecosystem. This lockdown due to corona virus disease has shown us as a society how quickly nature moves to take back the areas that humans have greedily taken and from animals and exploited. How much more evidence do you need to see that animals want and need their own habitat back? And you know, it is stupidity to kill off animals like the grizzly bears, whose population has teetered on the brink for decades, for trophies? We have moved beyond the romantic Hemingway novels, folks! We do not need drunken, rich Papa Hemingway wanna-bees traipsing through the Montana wilderness! The animals that hunters would be after would be the largest, most Darwinianly fit creatures, which are precisely the ones that need to continue their gene pool! I am massively against this proposal and I want you to know I have spent much time in Montana, rockhounding and hiking and enjoying the beauty of the state which includes the animals. And I may not want to run into a grizzly bear, nor see one but I greatly respect their territory and their right to exist and be allowed to live a full, natural life protected from trophy hunting! Please listen to my common sense and do not allow this. Thank you.

Grizzlies are an important member of a healthy ecosystem. ALL animals have a right to continue to live in their environment. Humans have no right to eliminate a species, regardless of the reasons. They will pay the price for assuming that right at some point. Unfortunately, the specie(s) are gone by then, the damage is done. Do not let this happen to the grizzly population of Montana!

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act.. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Please do not allow trophy hunting of grizzly bears. There is no reason to take an innocent animal's life for sports. Hunting is uncivilized and cruel. It is senseless. Once depleted , tte grizzly bear population may take decades to come back, if ever.

Please consider all humane options including working with various charity groups to protect Grizzlys as well as humans. We all need to live here in peace.

I would like to see continued protection for grizzly bears in Montana. I used to live in Anaconda and Missoula prior that. My Wife and I greatly enjoy backpacking and bowhunting. I participated in pushing for grizzly protection and was glad to see it happen. Even though I know "just" how big and dangerous they can be to me personally while out bowhunting and backpacking, I would still rather know that they are still alive and well. Same goes for wolves and cougars. On that note, ecosystems in general need protection, and part of that protection is having all the species there that historically have been there since the whole system is even more connected than we know, and by now, we know a lot more. So, please keep all the wildlife numbers on the upside. Thanks - Paul Howard (and Stacy Drake), Corvallis, Oregon.

People who kill for trophies should be hunted themselves to see what it is like. The U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service listed four distinct populations of grizzly bear as "threatened," in part, because the species was reduced to only about 2% of its former range south of Canada and grizzlies also provides shelter for many other species of wildlife that share the bears' home range.

Grizzly bears should be allowed to live in peace and harmony with their environment. Their habitat protected and they should not live in fear of trophy hunting practices which is cruel. Human beings can find other ways to entertain themselves without hurting god given creatures that make our environment beautiful and majestic. Human beings destroy so much in this world that we have little care or empathy for taking care of what is left. I truly believe mankind is on a spiral of destruction and this is one example of negative decision making if you allow it to happen.

This is some kind of sick joke right? The godamm world is ending and you want to kill bears for trophies! You are really sick cruel people. And do not think that anyonw will fall for sustenance. It's RICH WHITE MEN KILLING ANYTHING THEY WANT TO Get over yourselves. Here's the nice way of asking you to stop being horrible:

Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I hope that you will protect grizzly bears from trophy hunters. The bears and the wilderness should be left alone, free from trophy hunters, hunters, developers, and sports vehicles. We need to protect the remaining wildlife, and one of the easiest ways to protect the bears and the wilderness is to stop people who want to hunt in order to have bragging rights.

Grizzly bears are not on this earth to be murdered then stuffed, or made into a rug or head hung on wall. They are majestic beautiful wonders of nature. They feel pain and fear. They are living breathing creatures that deserve to be left to live their lives as nature intended.

Grizzlies are an iconic species, too important to be used as a release for trophy hunters to decorate their walls with. Please protect them.

We cannot allow these magnificent animals to become extinct just because evil people want to feel powerful by murdering them with a high powered gun. Please act now to protect these important links in the natural chain before it's too late.

There are too few grizzly bears in the wild to be hunted. They still have not recovered enough from when they were listed on the Endangered Species List. They are killed by so many different things such as cars, trains and control actions by those who have livestock. For the last one there must be a better non lethal way to keep them from livestock.
Please do not allow hunting of this iconic species.

Trophy hunting is old fashioned, out dated and just about any other negative comments you can think of. There is no room in today's world for this relic of the past. Let's do away with it once and for all.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. Please do not allow trophy hunting!

Please don't let the Grizzly Bear be killed in the name of trophy hunting!! What a selfish sport! And all for what? Nothing!! Grizzlies have just as much right to live out there life as man does. Probably even more so! They were here before us! We have no right to kill them just to put them on the wall!
